MP Peter Kilfoyle is a plain spoken Liverpudlian with little time for toffs, and little sympathy for the idea that anyone can get pleasure out of killing animals, but he agrees to step into the shoes of shooting party organiser, Jim Lamb.

For one week, the often squeamish Labour politician comes face to face with the raw reality of life on a Scottish country shooting estate. Expected to line up the guns and distribute the freshly shot pheasants, Kilfoyle finds himself caught between his own discomfort and the constant demands of the estate's dogged gamekeeper.
